Aspen trees show off their golden splendor while the American flag hangs in glorious red, white and blue from the Osguthorpe Barn north of Park City. Although autumn is officially here, there's no end in sight to the unseasonably warm temperatures throughout Utah. With September's average temperatures about 4 degrees above normal, the month could end as the fourth warmest on record. See weather map on C8.

th in the past decade has n a factor in relatively low erty rates and relatively median incomes, as well ne fact that the West's econ-y in general has been good. he Census Bureau figures Utah at 11th highest in the on for median income and in the nation for poverty s. While few states have erty rates lower than Utah, h's poverty rates have bed in recent years. Last r's results put Utah at 8th in nation for income and 49th poverty rates.

We've dropped a couple ts," Ashdown said.
ationwide, 31.1 million mericans lived in poverty, wn from 32.3 million, or 11.8 cent of the population, in 9. The median household ome was $42,148. Accountfor inflation, that is down htly from $42,187 the previ-year.

The drop in the poverty rate ongs to a larger story of eco-nic recovery since the last ession," said Daniel Weing, chief of the bureau's divi-2000 was $46,539.

Three-year averages for poverty across the nation, which are used to compare states and are taken from larger sample sizes, varied from 7.3 percent in Maryland to 19.3 percent in New Mexico. Utah's three-year average was 8.1 percent.

The Census Bureau uses three-year averages for state poverty rates instead of single-year statistics "to improve the statistical reliability of the estimates."

Analysts have cautioned not to consider these figures an up-to-date barometer of the country's financial health.

The figures come from a survey of 50,000 households taken in March in response to questions about income and poverty status for 2000. They are part of the Current Population Survey covering 1998, 1999 and 2000 and are not part of Census 2000.

Since 1993, Weinberg said, poverty rates have declined among most racial, ethnic and age groups.

The national poverty rate among blacks in 2000 was 22.1 cans under 18 was 16.2 percent, down for the third straight year, the bureau said. Even so, people under 18 still had a higher poverty rate than those in any other age group.

The poverty threshold differs by the size of the household.
For instance, in 2000, a family of four was considered to be impoverished if the household earned $17,603 or less a year.

Median income refers to the point at which half of households earn more and half earn less.

Although Utah's poverty rate has not gone down in recent years, welfare caseloads in Utah have declined significantly the past five years, a national anti-hunger citizens group reported in August.

According to RESULTS, the number of Utahns receiving temporary government assistance is down 38 percent since welfare reform was enacted in August 1996. The number of people getting food stamps is down 26.1 percent.

Vance said it's too early to tell if donations to food drives will taper off because people are giving to Sept. 11 relief efforts instead. Canned food from food drives sponsored by schools and colleges won't start coming in until November.

"I don't know that we've experienced the impact yet, but I think we will," Vance said. "We are concerned, and we are doing all we can to get as much food as we can."

Crane said donations to the Food and Care Coalition, which usually go up in September, have not increased this year.

"Usually our summer months are slower and things start picking up in September, but we haven't seen that this year," Crane said. "It could have a major impact because we're primarily community funded."

Unlike other charities that rely on federal and state grants to operate, the Food and Care Coalition runs mainly off donations from the community.

Besides providing meals for the homeless and poor, the nonprofit group has mentoring services to help people find
